

Michelle C. Burroughs, DHA, MPH, is the Community Engagement and Outreach Director for the Center for Healthy Communities (CHC) at the University of California, Riverside (UCR) School of Medicine (SOM). CHC's mission is focused on remedying social injustices and health disparities that contribute to the poor health of individuals in California's Inland Empire and beyond. Dr. Burroughs guides the CHC in promoting community-based, community-partnered, and population health research and working collaboratively through shared purpose with the community to build and strengthen trust. Dr. Burroughs has a depth of experience as a public health practitioner in direct patient care, community engagement strategies, state and county public health program administration, implementation, and evaluation. Dr. Burroughs also serves as Faculty Lead-Community Partnership & Engagement for The Program in Medical Education (PRIME), which is designed to train physicians specifically to address the healthcare needs of the African, Black, and Caribbean (ABC) communities of Inland Southern California
